Amendments to the Specification:

[0016] Although the concepts of molecular recognition and signal emission in assays are generally understood, conducting such assays is substantially different, and more complicated when the testing sample contains an intricate testing matrix with multiple constituents that can interfere with either recognition and/or signal emission of the targeted agent. An example of such a testing matrix is finished water.